

Tornado and Wind Damage to Homes

Insurance coverage

- Virtually every home insurance policy covers damage caused by wind damage, including tornados.
- In certain circumstances, homeowners who are unable to return to their home as a result of insured damage are entitled to additional living expenses.
- Damage to vehicles is usually covered if comprehensive or all perils coverage auto insurance has been purchased. This coverage is not mandatory so policyholders need to check their policies.
- Contrary to popular belief, there is no such thing as an “act of God” exclusion in any property insurance policy in Canada. In fact, insurers routinely pay for damage resulting from natural disasters, including windstorms, hail and wildfires.

What should homeowners do?

- In the aftermath of a disaster, a homeowner’s first priority must be his or her personal safety.
- To facilitate claims processing, homeowners should document all property losses and take photographs of damage when possible.
- Homeowners who have experienced property damage should discuss their coverage and any deductibles with their insurance representative as soon as possible.

After wind and tornado damage, homeowners should:

- Not enter the home until emergency officials say it is OK to do so
- Not turn on any electrical switches until their electrical system has been checked
- Assess the damage that has been done and determine if it can be cleaned up while taking proper precautions, or whether professionals should be hired.

- Check for fumes if you have gas service, and call the local fire department and gas company immediately if an odour is detected
- Take all reasonable steps to prevent further damage to any valuable property stored in the basement by relocating the items to another part of the house
